Callie Miller began work with Reformed University Fellowship (RUF) in 2012. Before she was called to ministry, she spent nearly 10 years preparing for a career in research science at Francis Marion University in Florence, SC (where she earned her BS in Biology) and at the University of Pittsburgh (where she earned her MS in molecular neuropharmacology).

Her return to work with RUF at the University of Pittsburgh in 2015, via RUFs at Penn State and Sweet Briar Women's College, was something of a spiritual homecoming: it was in Pittsburgh that she fell in love with Christ, and God radically changed her heart and calling through the gospel, His church and community. It was also in Pittsburgh that Callie met her husband James, a linguophile who studied linguistics and German at Pitt, loves all things J.R.R Tolkien, and serves as a ruling elder in their local church. They bonded over discussing personality types, appreciating mundane graces, and exploring places and ideas.

Callie is delighted by conversation, yoga, coffee, and big earrings. She loves discussing how people relate to God, themselves, the world and others, and she also loves to dance.
